Can love survive the centuries? Can it transcend an ocean of time?

Octavia is from the 23rd century. In her time, very little is known of the Dark Years – that time prior to the terrible plague of 2017 that wipes out most of humanity. Her mission: return to the past, live among the locals undetected and study the world before it ends, gathering as much information as possible before returning to her own time.

No one can know her true identity and the terrible knowledge she carries about the future. Her mission seems easy enough, until she arrives in our time and something happens she never thought possible. She falls in love.

For Octavia, cool and detached, raised on a eugenics farm where children are taught to avoid close ties and emotional attachments, love was never in the equation. It was definitely not part of her mission plan. But all that changes when she meets Jake, a handsome single father of a precocious eight year old girl.

As their romance blossoms, Octavia is troubled by powerful new feelings stirring within her – and the dark secret she must keep from everyone around her, including Jake.

But as he grows suspicious, Octavia's secret threatens to tear them apart and she is forced to make a terrible decision: Does she return to the safety of her own time, or remain in the twenty-first century and face the end of the world with the man she loves?
