This is the true first-hand account of the U.S. Army's 1886 campaign to capture Geronimo and his band, as told by a first-hand witness of the events, H.W. Daly the packmaster in charge of the campaign's pack trains. In this campaign, the Army with Apache Scouts pursued Geronimo and his small band, initially under the command of General George Crook. Geronimo negotiated a "surrender with General Crook but fled the next morning with a small portion of his followers." General Nelson A. Miles was then brought in to command US Forces. In 1886, General Miles selected Captain Henry Lawton, in command of B Troop, 4th Cavalry, at Fort Huachuca, and First Lieutenant Charles B. Gatewood, to lead the expedition that brought Geronimo and his followers back to the reservation system for a final time.
