Excerpt from Sir Guy De Lusignan a Tale of Italy, Vol. 1 of 2

The following story is founded on facts related in the annals of Southern Italy, during that part of the thirteenth century when Charles of Anjou was invested with the sovereignty of Naples and Sicily, when Louis the 9th reigned in France, and Henry the 3rd in England.

This may be considered as a period of history replete with interesting occurrences, and memorable events. It may not improperly be termed the dawn of Europe's civilization; for it led the way to the splendid revival of arts and literature which graced the subsequent ages. It gave rise to many useful inventions, and produced some important discoveries: by that of the Mariners Compass, for example, navigators became more enterprising, and communication with distant countries more easy.
